Dale,

Yes you may post our comments on the web.

Thanks for the P1 clarification.

However, I think that it would be useful for EPA and/or BPI to list what QA requirements are fulfilled, and what requirements are not fulfilled, with BPI (or a BPI affiliate) doing QA -- and ignore who's paying for what.

It's my understanding from everything written to date that if a sponsor requires BPI accreditation (so that BPI does QA), that all QA requirements are fulfilled for field testing and red flag review, but not customer feedback (the satisfaction survey). But, it is the sponsor's obligation to stay in constant communication with BPI to stay on top of the quality of each contractor (because the sponsor is ultimately responsible). Is this correct?

Cheers!

Asa
